

FAMED INVENTOR CUT HIS THROAT

Antone Wywiolok, Who Had Married a Vaudeville Actress, Ended His Life in the East Side Home of a Friend.

LOST PLANS AND PAPERS ON NEW DISCOVERY.

Had Scheme for Production of Electricity Without Steam and Was Frantic When Results of Labor Were Lost.

Antone Wywiolok, who five years ago started the scientific world with his wonderful researches in electricity, one of the figures in European thought centers, cut his throat to-day at No. 294 East Thirty-fourth street. His wife, Ray Remington, at one time a noted burlesque actress, who had won the favor of European cities, is now playing an engagement at Miner's Bowery Theatre.

Wywiolok's self-destruction was due to the loss of patents which he was about to apply for and which he claimed were stolen from him yesterday while on his way to Boston. For five years he had worked for one result to the exclusion of everything else. He was on the eve of success, according to his own thinking. Then came the loss of the plans and papers. With despair in his heart he could see no further possibility of hope, and death was his only recourse.

Electricity Without Steam. Five years ago Wywiolok was a young electrician of Vienna lecturing before academies and meetings of scientific men from all the universities of Europe. His fixed idea was to perfect a machine which would permit the generation of electricity without steam as the essential producing power. To this end he gave all his energies and enthusiasm.

Then a woman crossed his path. She was Ray Remington, a beautiful American, who at the time was appearing in the Ronacher Haus, Vienna's most famous music hall. Captivated by the dashing, brilliant American actress, Wywiolok for the moment forgot his work and sacrificed his ambitions on the altar of love. Following the actress first to St. Petersburg, then to Moscow, then to Rome, through the big German cities and finally to Paris, he won her hand. They were married in the French capital, and the papers printed the story of the romance—the cold scientist pursuing the actress over a continent.

After finishing her engagement in Europe, Mrs. Wywiolok expressed a desire to return to her native country and play in vaudeville houses from New York to San Francisco. The husband objected to this at first, but the wife's desires were stronger than his own wishes, and he agreed to the American trip. He was to go to Boston and there take up the scientific work which he had planned and started in Europe.

Had Two Children. The family life of the Wywioloks was harmonious with but few exceptions. Two children have sprung from the union, both girls, one three and the other one year old. They live with their mother at the home of Mrs. Wywiolok at No. 294 West One Hundred and Forty-fourth street.

For many months Wywiolok had not earned anything by his scientific work, but his wife looked after his support as well as that of the children. Talm working over his schemes, which he always thought would bring him wealth, she sent a portion of her salary every week.

Arriving here from Boston, he went at once to the Bowery Theatre. He was frantic with rage and grief, for his plans and papers had been stolen. His ravings terrified his wife and the women in the theatre at the time. After much effort on the part of John H. Ryan, No. 294 East Thirty-fourth street, who had confided his scheme to a big Boston manufacturer, he said he was confident that the papers were stolen. He then left the theatre, his wife thinking that he was going home to see his children.

Wywiolok did not go to his home last night, but went to a friend's house, the home of John H. Ryan, No. 294 East Thirty-fourth street. He said that he had words with his wife and that she never wanted to see him again. This morning he sent his friend out of the bedroom in which they both slept for a drink of whisky. During the absence of Speth Wywiolok cut his throat. He died soon after.

FRIENDSHIPS.

The friendships that children form have such an important bearing on their character development that mothers cannot be too watchful in the matter. No matter how carefully a child may be brought up in the home, friendship with a bad boy or girl may do irreparable harm spiritually, morally and even physically. It is futile to forbid the making of school friendships. More, it is utterly wrong to do so, for several very evident reasons. A child ought to have friends. It is good for him, and the desire for them is natural and instinctive. But they should be of the right kind. The mother can always discover whether her child has made a good choice by inviting the children to her home, and watching them at their play without seeming to do so. Natural character will soon assert themselves in play, especially at the children feel free and unwatched, and talk and action will reveal the kind of children they are. Sly, secretive children are to be distrusted, and such children should be watched and such children will be eradicated as early as possible by the watchful mother. When once her child has formed a friendship with a nice companion such a friendship should be respected and encouraged by parents.—Scottish American.

GIRAFFE LORE.

Carl Hagenbeck says: "The giraffe is a very awkward animal to handle. A full-grown one ran away from me in the zoo some years ago. The rope I held him by got entangled around my arm and I was dragged along the streets and was fearfully banged about. I have had several exciting experiences with frightened giraffes. One time I had a troop of elephants that I took to Vienna broke loose and ran away. I was upon one of the elephants and all the others stopped with him. On another occasion a big African elephant frightened and bolted in the streets of Hamburg. I held fast to his ears, however, and brought him to a stand-

CRAZED MAN LEAPS OUT OF A WINDOW

David Sherr, of Brooklyn, Had the Hallucination that Men Were Chasing Him Seeking for His Life.

His mind racked by the hallucination that he was being chased by men who had his death in view, David Sherr, thirty-eight years old, of No. 45 Leonard street, Brooklyn, jumped to-day from the third-story window of the house in which he lived and is now dying in St. Catherine's Hospital.

Ever since the labor troubles in the tailors' union, of which Sherr is a member, his mind has been more or less unsettled. Last night he made a wild rush through his house with a carving knife, crying out that he was pursued by men who had planned his destruction. His wife and three children fearing bodily harm called for the police and Sherr was quieted. About midnight he went through the same antics, a policeman being called in for the second time. Frightening Sherr by a threat of imprisonment the officer left him again to the care of wife and children.

At 6 o'clock this morning Sherr jumped from a chair on which he was reclining, and with a yell ran through the rooms of the house to the rear window, and with a wild leap went through the window, landing on the fire escape and falling to the ground. The fall of three stories was broken by some clotheslines in the yard. However, fractured his skull, and the physicians say that he cannot live.

CIG. RETTE BRIBES.

Not so much discussion as might have been expected was occasioned by the report that, to induce a large attendance at the Sunday school of All Saints' Church in Wallington, Somerset, England, the boys were distributed with the boys leaving the service. The vicar, in stopping this practice, says he does not believe in bribes. The boys, however, Sunday school, and that the scheme was undertaken without his consent or knowledge. His advice that none of the boys receiving the cigarettes was under sixteen years of age.

ITALY'S KING.

The approaching visit of the King of Italy to London will not be the first time an Italian sovereign has visited England, as has been stated. Victor Emmanuel came to a week in England in 1885, when he was entertained by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert and was created a Knight of the Garter. The real purpose of his visit, however, was to pay his addresses to the late Duchess of Sutherland, then Countess of Sutherland, who was, however, not at all disposed to become Queen of Sardinia. The monarch was favored by Lord Palmerston, Count Cavour and Louis Napoleon.

REAL ESTATE MAN TRIES TO END LIFE

Rudolph Van Lang Found by Janitress Unconscious, with the End of a Gas Tube in His Mouth.

Mrs. Wedlock, the janitress, found the door to Van Lang's room open and the room without an occupant. In a smaller room near by she found the real estate dealer lying on the floor, his head resting on a pillow and two chair cushions.
